

Christie and Sarah Butler: Conway Store

CB: That's where a lot of the men every day would come and eat lunch. Was at my Granddaddy's store. And he would keep bal, sticks of baloney in the refrigerator where he kept his soft drinks. He had a salt box, people would come and buy a paper bag of salt, you know. He had the cases with the candy behind it. I remember the Christmas candy, you know, and it was just dumped out in there, you know. Just a lot of the fond memories.

SB: I would go to town sometimes, and leave the kids. She would stay in the grocery store a lot, my mother-in-law. Well I would carry the kids by there to stay until I go. Well, they'd be thrilled over that, 'cause she'd let them have a cold drink while they were there.
